-An Unlooked For Encounter.

When Lord Donal came out of sur telegraph office, Jennie said to him, Wait a moment till I go into the sleeping car and get my rugs and hand bag. "I'll go for them," he cried impetu-

"Oh, no!" she said. "I'll tell you why later. The conductor is a villain and was in collusion with the police." "Oh, I know that!" said Lord Donal. "Poor devil! He can't help himself. He must do what the police order him to do while he is in Russia."

"I'll get my things and go into an ordinary first class carriage. When I pass this door, you must get your belongings and come and find me. There is still time, and I don't want the conductor to see us together."

"Very well," said the young man, with exemplary obedience.

When the train started, they were seated together in a far forward car "One of my failings," said the girl

"is that I act first and think afterward. I am sorry now that I asked you to send that telegram to the princess. "Because I have a great deal to tell you, and perhaps you will wish to withdraw from the rash engagement you have undertaken." "A likely thing!" cried the ardent lover. "Indeed, Miss Princess, if you think you can get rid of me so easily as all that, you are mistaken."

"Well, I want to tell you why I did not allow you to resign. Slowly she undid the large buttons of her jacket. Then, taking it by the lapel and holding it so that no one else could see, she drev. partly forth from the inside pocket the large envelope until the stamp of the embassy was plainly vis ible. Lord Lonal's eyes opened to their widest capacity, and his breath seemed

"Great heavens!" he gasped at last. 'Do you mean to say you have it?" "Yes," she said, buttoning up her jacket again. "I robbed the robbers.

Listen, and I will tell you all that happened. But, first, are you armed?" "Yes," he replied; "I have a trumpery revolver in my pocket. Little good it did me last night."

"Very weil; we shall be across the frontier by noon today. If the Russian authorities find before that time how they have been checkmated, and if they have any suspicion that I am the cause of it, is it not likely that they will have me stopped and searched on some pretense or other ?" Lord Donal pondered for a moment. "They are quite capable of it," he said; "but, Jennie, I will fight for you against the whole Russian empire, and "That is what I was going to propose," said Jennie. "And now listen to the story I have to tell you, and then you will know exactly why I came to Russia.

"Don't tell me anything you would rather not," said the young man hurriedly.

"I would rather not, but it must be told," answered the girl. The story lasted a long time, and

"Ab, that comes through the good heartedness of the princess and the kindness of the prince," said Jennie. "He has managed it." "But what in the world did you do for the Austrian government, Jennie?" "That is a long story, Donal, and I think a most interesting one."

"Well, let us thank heaven that we on personal tax have a long journey for you to tell it and me to listen."

And, saying this, the unabashed, forward young man took the liberty of kissing his fair companion good night right there amid all the turmoil and bustle of the Schlesischer Bahnhof in

It was early in the morning when the two met again in the restaurant car. It was quite evident that Jennie had $41 60 slept well, and, youth being on her side, her rest had compensated for the nightmare of the Russian journey. She was simply but very effectively dressed and looked as fresh and pretty and cool and sweet as a snowdrop. The enchanted less $16 overcharge, balance, $35.85. young man found it impossible to lure his eyes away from her, and when, with a little laugh, Jennie protested that he was missing all the fine scenery he answered that he had something much more beautiful to look upon, whereat Jennie blushed most enticingly, smiled at him, but made no further protest. Whether it was his joy in meeting Jennie, or the result of his night's sleep, or his relief at finding that his career was not wrecked, as he had imagined, or all L. Oakes, $8.
